Bringing patriotism down to stubborn facts, Mr. Freeman, without recourse to oratorical flourish, but in simple, straightforward and convincing language, pointed out that the conservation of food holds the key to victory over Germany and illustrated in his own original way the countless channels in which the colored people of thecountry, from the wealthiest to the humblest, could be of vital assitance to America and the allies in this titanic struggle for world dethis titanic struggle for world de-mocracy. IN THE WAR CRISIS.

Mr. Freeman, after analyzing the necessity for the full use of every resource for the winning of this battle for liberty, impressed upon his food administration was to try to organize all the people of the United States in the conservation of foodstuff. He stressed and particularized the fact that food conservation clubs should be arranged for among the colored people in schools, churches, business fraternities, commercial and women's clubs, and stated plainly that there was something that the humblest Negro could do.

"With the shortage of food abroad, with the partial failure of transportation, the shortage of labor, and the present abnormal world condition facing us on every hand," said Mr. Mrs. P. R. A feature of these replies was the report of Agent Harry Simms who is conducting the Movable Schools for Negro farmers, their wives and children. Selecting seed corn from the stalk, specimen hogs to teach the men and crocus sack rugs, canned goods and the like for the women, he, with his helpers, gives concrete lessons of the good and the bad in farming and in farm life. Moreover, he takes up in detail the question of health, discussing the use of ototh brushes, screens, more than one room Backward in health protection is Greene County, where he held one of his schools, all farmers promised to take steps towards correcting these weaknesses immediately.
